GOT A TRADE? GOT IT MADE!

Get a job, and then build a career on-the-job with training, skills and qualifications.

Once you've landed the job, taking up on-job training, including an apprenticeship, is a great way to kick-start your career. You earn as you learn, gain specialist skills and knowledge and achieve a nationally recognised qualification to set you up.

Upskill on-job with ServiceIQ's programmes

ServiceIQ is the official Industry Training Organisation (ITO) for the service industry, and we have a great range of top quality on-job training programmes for people working in: retail supply chain; accomodation; travel; tourism; aviation; clubs; museums; food service; cafes, bars, restaurants; and quick service restaurants. All of our programmes lead to national qualifications that are recognised by employers.

If you work in one of those sectors, chances are your boss could enrol you for an on-job training programme from ServiceIQ.

We also have apprenticeship programmes for talented people who are already working in a restaurant or in the aviation industry, and who want to upskill and qualify to become a chef or an aviation engineer.

First step – get a job!

In our experience, many people find jobs by seeing what's out there or getting advice about how to best go about getting their career off the ground.

Two very useful websites are www.careers.govt.nz which has lots of information and advice on literally hundreds of careers in the service industry and more.

And if you know the kind of job and industry you want to work in, you could also check out www.seek.co.nz which is New Zealand's biggest job site with thousands of jobs.

Making the move from school to career

If you are still at school, talk to your careers adviser. They can tell you about ServiceIQ's Gateway school programmes in retail, aviation, tourism, hospitality and tourism cultural camps. All of these programmes give you the skills you need to help you get a job, and then earn as you learn to gain a qualification and build a career.

GOT A TRADE? GOT IT MADE!